British oil will last at least 10 years

By Derek Harris

British oil discoveries are by no means exhausted and self-sufficiency in natural gas should the century, Mr Alan Gregory, president of the Institute of Petroleum, told the World

Petroleum Congress yesterday.

But he added that new fields would be smaller and cost more to

Dr Wilhelm von Islemann, the Congress president, told its first technical session in London that rising demand would mean extracting oil in even barsher climates and deeper waters since further dramatic discoveries were unlikely. But he forecast that oil fields were unlikely to run dry in the next 30 years or so.

A joint paper by Mr Gregory and Mr Dan Ion, chairman of the British national committee of the congress, described Britain as "a country exceptionally well en-dowed both in actual and potential oil and gas reserves and well equipped as a source of long-standing and rapidly evolving petroleum technology.

Britain was producing more oil than any country except Saudi Arabia, Mr Ion said. British production had risen from 1.6 than 100 million tonnes last year.

Revised forecasts of world energy demand in the early part of the next century were given by Dr Sven Hultin, chairman of the International Executive Committee of the World Energy

In the year 2000 it is expected The Government's recognition than 12 billion tonnes of oil, Gloomier view of recovery by CBI

By Edward Townsend Industrial Correspondent Britain's economy is likely to grow by less than 2 per cent in the coming year although manufac-turers are increasingly optimistic about their business prospects, the Confederation of British Industry says today.

CBI economists, who predicted in March that the gross domestic product would rise by 2.5 per cent next year, now believe the recovery will be slower than expected particularly because of the continued strength of the pound and its impact on exports.

pound and its impact on exports.

They also believe that gdp will be affected by lower pay settlements – ironically one of the trends applauded by the CBI leadership – and the subsequent impact on consumer spending. The economists emphasize, however, that lower pay should increase output in the longer term by improving competitiveness. The downward revision of output expectations is not re-flected in the CBI's view of manufacturing in which it expects output to rise by 3 per cent this year and 3-5 per cent next year. Total exports of goods and services are forecast to rise by 1-5 per cent this year, compared with last year and by a further 4 per cent next year.

As a result, the CBI's cut in its gdp forecast is unlikely to cause much of a stir among ministers particularly as it is coupled with industrial trends inquiry which shows that for the seventh successive month companies' expectations point to rising

About 30 per cent of the 1.563 manufacturers in the survey expect their volume of production to increase in the next four months, although the expected increase is from a low base, and 60 per cent expect output to remain the same. Total order books are still showing signs of improving, although 40 per cent of manufacturers say they are below normal. Demand is strongest for con-sumer goods where 75 per cent of companies say orders are at or above normal and there are some "tentative signs"; the CBI says, that demand is vising in the capital goods sector

In contrast, exports are weakening slightly compared with the May and June surveys: only !! per cent of exporters report above normal orders.

Sir James Cleminson, the CBI deputy president, said: "Although the increase in output is from a low base and is by no means dramatic, manufacturing is moving in the right direction."

The fall-off in exports was disappointing, he said, and was "a indication of the need for British industry to be as competitive as possible in overseas

The CBI economists see no end in sight to Britain's consumer boom, despite a fall in retail sales volume last month. The drop probably reflected the hot weather and the impact of the mortgage rate rise on incomes, they say, with fewer summer sales in the shops because because of the high level of consumer spending.

The Ministry of Defence and the Home Office are very sensitive on the point. There is a secret interdepartmental committee of civil ser-vants which meets on the problems of inner cities. But at

It is possible, however, to piece together today's official view. In February 1980, General (now Field Marshal) Sir Edwin Bramall, then Chief of the General Staff, now Chief of the Defence Staff, delivered a virtually unnoticed lecture on the subject to the Royal Society of Arts entitled

Sir Edwin Bramall: worried by a 'grey area'

"The place of the British Army in public order". Sir Edwin is unwilling to be interviewed about it in the context of the 1981 disorders. But, on Sir Edwin's behalf, a defence ministry spokesman said: "He believes the principles remain unchanged... (the lecture) holds good now as much as it did then"

Sir Edwin's guiding principle is Sir Edwin's guiding principle is that it would be "totally inappropriate" to use the armed forces.
"In a main public order role unless disorder was occurring on such a scale that the police could not cope and our whole parliamentary system was threatened, or a minority, by violent means and armed force, was attempting to challenge the very authority of

Sir Edwin in 1980 was worried, prophetically as it turned out, by a "grey area". A lack of police training and equipment training and equipment in riots might leave them exhausted and vulnerable. He did not want the Army to be drawn in so he recommended that the police should train in "anti-riot drills" acquire protective clothing, shields and visors. But if the police wanted specialist assistance - night vision, helicopters, special light-ing or bomb disposal - they "will never have to turn in vain to us for help of this kind", Sir Edwin

Since 1981, that "grey area" has been filled by the police. They are much better placed now in terms of equipment, training, speed and flexibility of response which, senior officers reckon, is one reason why riots have not recurred. Significantly, the police did not even call in the Army to teach them riot drill based on its Northern Ireland experience.
At the highest levels in the police, it is now believed that the armed forces would be needed only if there was an "armed insurrection" in Brixton or a comparable area. In other words, although no change has been made in The Manual of Military Law or the doctrine of military aid to the civil power, the threshold of intervention, beyond which the thin blue line would be reinforced by a khaki line, has been raised.

Report on Celtic head untrue

By Clifford Longley Religious Affairs Correspo

The claim by an historian that buried in the garden of a house in Stoke-on-Trent, Staffordshire, was not meant to be taken seriously, it was learnt by The Times last night.

The Roman Catholic auth-orities in Birmingham had wished to have the garden dug up to recover the missing head of St Penket, Dr Colin Richmond of Keele University said.

He added: "It has been taken a little beyond what I intended." Dr Richmond was the author of an article in the Downside Review which claimed that St Penket's head had been stolen in 1868 from Friberg Cathedral in Switzerland and found its way into the possession of Señor Jorge Luis Borges, the Argentine writer. Señor Borges visited Stoke-on-Trent in 1963, according to the article, to return the head to Penkhull, allegedly named after St Penket.

Dr Richmond said that he had told the representatives of the Archdiocese of Birmingham that it was "just a nice story". He was the author of a similar "conceit" in Encounter magazine in 1979 called: "The day Henry James discovered Dada".

He claimed that he had submitted the Celtic head article to Father Daniel Rees, editor of the Downside Review, with a covering letter explaining what it was, but the article was published as if it was a genuine piece of research. Father Rees, who was contacted by the The Times last Saturday, said then that he thought it was genuine, although "the facts could bear more than one interpretation". A summary of the article was published in The Times yesterday.

Father Rees could not be

Irish Prime Minister to speak out against abortion ban amendment

From Richard Ford Belfast

The Prime Minister of the Irish Republic will issue a statement next weekend opposing the constitutional amendment baning abortion. It will be the climax of an increasing divisive climax of an increasing divisive and political campaign.

Dr Garret Fitzgerald will outline his opposition to the Fianna Fail wording, which he believes is dangerous, and urge the electorate to vote "no" in the referendum on September 7.

His crucial statement, which is unlikely to be in the form of a nationwide broadcast will be made at the end of a week in which Mr Dick Spring, Leader of the Labour Party and deputy Prime Minister, is also expected to call for a "no" vote.

Four cabinet ministers have already expressed opposition to the amendment. Two more Fine Gael members have been publicly rebuked by the chairman of the parliamentary party for speaking out after a decision that only Dr FitzGerald would outline the party's position.

The tone of the debate is becoming increasingly rancorous, with the Minister for Health and Social Welfare, Mr Barry Desmond, being criticized by the prolife amendment campaigners for making a statement "unworthy of a member of the Government."

Mr Desmond said that the supporters of the amendment credibility and might be disastrous at the next general election. were "a very small group of extreme Catholics of extreme constitutional views.

The Fianna Pail party has remained on the face of it solidly in support of the amendment, although some deputies who opposed Mr Charles Haughey during the several attempts against his leadership are thought to be opposed to the wording.

However, a grassroots "Fianna rainwayer, a grassroots 'rianna' Fail against the amendment' has emerged to lobby party deputies and senators. Mr Alan Graham, a Dublin solicitor, who is one of its organizers, said that up to 20 members of the parliamentary party were likely to vote "no" but it was unlikely they rould our party were likely to vote "no" but it was unlikely they rould our party were likely to the party of the pa it was unlikely they would say so

With most people believing the referendum will be carried, attention is now focused on the turnout and regional variations. It is thought there will be a high turnout and "yes" vote in the rural west, but in the rapidly growing and urbanized Dublin area and surrounding midlands there will be a larger "no" vote, with perhaps a low turnout.

If the amendment is passed, its opponents expect there will be moves made to have the courts declare intra-uterine contracep-tive devices and the morning after Pill as abortifacients and therefore

Kohl hopes resignation crisis will not delay symbolic trip to Israel

المحاصلات والمحاصلات الأوارية

tened resignation has thrown into confusion Dr Helmut Kohl's fourday visit to Israel. But the West German Chancellor seems determined not to let the crisis stop him going ahead with a visit seen here and in Jerusalem as being of considrable symbolic importance.

The Bonn Government's spokesman admitted yesterday that the Chancellor was unsure whether he could depart tomorrow as planned or whether the prospect of an impending election in Israel would force a postponement. Urgent consultations are now going on in Bonn and Jerusalem to see what politics and protocol should dictate.

Dr Kohl was due to hold talks with Mr Begin, but was not expecting any substantive political negotiations. He has stated firmly that the main aim of the trip, promised before his election victory in March, was to improve the atmosphere between the two countries, and reaffirm German commitment to Israel's prosperity and security.

Relations between the two countries have been strained since

Mr Menachem Begin's threa- Herr Helmut Schmidt two years ago, accusing him of being loyal to Hitler until the end, and of disregarding German guilt for the

> That outburst, which led to an official protest from Bonn, followed the former Chancellor's backing for Palestinian self-deter-mination. Herr Schmidt disapproved of Mr Begin's policies and did not visit Israel, so that it is now 10 years since a West German Chancellor, Herr Willy Brandt, went to Jerusalem.

Israel welcomed Dr Kohl's election as a chance to start a fresh chapter in relations and although Bonn, together with other EEC states, criticized the Israeli invasion of Lebanon last summer and has called for a troop withdrawal and an end to the occupation of the West Bank, Dr Kohl, is not expected to press these criticisms in public.

A more important disagreement is the proposed German sale of 200 Leopard 2 tanks to Saudi Arabia. Israel has lobbied hard against this, saying it was unacceptable that West Germany Mr Begin vehemently attacked should arm Israel's enemies.

Although Dr Kohl initially favoured the sale, he has put off a final decision until his visit to Saudi Arabia in October.

However, unofficially it is now clear the deal will not so through, and that Dr Kohl, like Herr Schmidt, sees it as contradicting Bonn's embargo on arms to the principal Middle East antagonists

The Chancellor, who makes much of the fact he was only two years old when Hitler came to power, has not flinched from denouncing Germany's Nazi past or admitting historic guilt for the Holocaust. One of his first acts on arrival will be to lay a wreath at the Yad Vashem memorial to Holocaust victims.

Israelis will study his speeches carefully, however, to ensure that he does not seek to minimize German responsibility.

Last week Dr Kohl said his country had done what was "humanly possible" to expiate this guilt. Bonn wanted friendly relations with Israel, as with Arab countries, but would not say "yes and amen" to all Israeli policies especially its settlements on the West Bank.

Aquino's hearse mobbed

Manila (Reuter) - Crowds yesterday surged round the hearse conveying the body of Benigno Aquino, the murdered opposition leader, back to Manila, and for a time the vehicle was carried by the mourners, witnesses said.

When the hearse turned into the highway, about 100 young men in symbolical colours dashed out and picked it up.

Yes, Razor Guts was back, bigger than ever ... but Raza had been after more than that, and his second purpose was also achieved, because as the soldiers in camp after camp participated in, or witnessed from roaring ringsides, the pulverization of the one genuine war hero left in the Army, they began to regain faith in themselves, they began to believe that if they were good enough to dump the General in the dirt they couldn't be such pathetic fighting men as they had come to imagine. After one year of wrestling Raza Hyder called a halt. He had lost both upper central incisors and sustained countless other injuries. artistic licence is easier to understand; every group has put on the show it wants to present, whether it's knockabout hospital-student face or deepest tragedy, with no concession to anyone. The capitalist element lies in the fact that each group is financially as much on its own as any new company listching its way through the jungle of the City of London. No group is asked to appear on the Fringe. They have all chosen to be here. They desperately want artistic acching; they desperately need financial surveys.

So the furrowed brow on the director's face or the lack of next week's rent. The fact that make or break time is crushed into the three short weeks of the Festival makes the times short weeks of the Pestival makes the fiertows deeper. They have worked hard to get here. (Some people work harder at the Fringe than at any other time in their lives: go into any Fringe venue during the day and you are almost certain to find one or two bodies that out, getting their sleep for a couple of days.) don't know whether the show is good or not. But I recognize that almost frightening hunger for a review. A review! The magic recipe for success. The difference between life and death. The appearance of The Scotsman each night, with its full page of Fringe stotices, is awaited as engerly as the Israelites might have awaited Moses's descent with the Ten Commandutents, it would have.

Another man I bumped into (a los of bumping into takes place here) was with a Cambridge review last year, which got a very good review at the end of the run. He's with a different show this year, but the same revue company is getting good houses this year on the basis of last year's notice. What infuriates him is that it is a rotten revue this year. His pain seems hard to bear. I know the feeling. The first year Instant Sunshine was here, the Times man came to see us on the last night. He said he enjoyed it very much. However, he wouldn't be writing a motice, as he'd only come for an enjoyable

Still, the whole incident gave me a new opening quarter of an hour for the show and the description of it went like a bomb. I was so excited that I took the rest of the show a bit too fast, and only learnt afterwards that the man from The Scotsman had been in the audience."

The Scotsman! The review! It's worse than waiting for A-level results. Much worse, in the case of the company (nameless) of whom The Scotsman said the other day: "This is a group with a dedicated following on the Fringe. It has to be said that it's hard to see why." An ambitious fishion project designed to one antidous season project designed to provide a showcase and selling base for some of Britain's best young designers, opens in Kensington on September 1.

The work of more than 50 carefully selected, new designers will go on sale at Hyper Hyper, a complex of individually tented show units for new designers in designers. rented shop units for new designers to do their own trading. There is space for fashion shows and there will be displays of fashion shows and there will be displays of selected work from art colleges. Hyper Hyper was conceived and set up by Lauren Gordon, who runs Antiquarius and a number of other fashion organizations, and Mike Bridge, who formerly ran Mainseason and Midseason. Lauren explains: "There is a huge amount of talent coming out of art colleges in Britain but it is often immensely hard for a new designer to get a break. At present, with money tight, bounques which might once have gambled on designs by new names tend to stick to people they know.

"If we are going to recognize the talent

"If we are going to recognize the talent in the country we must draw it together so that it can be seen. The virtue from the designers' point of view is that they rent a unit with all overheads included so they know exactly where they stand. Mike and I will ensure that everything is run professionally - very often new designers just do not have the experience to run a business on highly professional lines. Although the designers are part of an umbrella organization, they have their own shopfronts and their own names

The designers selling at Hyper Hyper include: Lec Tan, Barbara de Vries, the Camden Set, Dexter Wong, Ellis Flyte who designed the costumes for Dark Crystal, and Caroline Eavis who has been selling to

Lauren explains: "We selected people very carefully to represent a crossof the kind of ideas and creativity around and to demonstrate the high quality of young British design. We tend to have people who have been working for a little while because we want to be certain our designers have got their production

Lec Tan, who left the London College of Fashion two years ago and has been selling to Whistles since, explains why he is taking a unit at Hyper Hyper, "For Whistles I do a collection designed for their kind of customer. I want to do other things and establish my name. I believe that within an organization which will attract attention I will be noticed and create exactly the kind of clothes I want for different kinds of

This is not the first project set up to focus on and provide an outlet for our young designers. Two years ago Steve Hudson set up New Masters, a shop on the King's Road, where he sells the work of designers he and his wife judge particularly good. More recently Caroline Coates set up the Amalgamated Talent group of young designers, staging twice yearly shows for

The Hackney Fashion Centre, set up to stimulate the fashion industry in a variety of ways, puts on exhibitions of work by design students leaving college and they are now developing courses in setting up a business for young designers.

The value of all these projects is that they will help to establish an identity for young designers in one place, whereas they have tended to be scattered around in small workshops and studios, hard to find and even harder to view as a corporate group with a contribution to fashion

Another of the problems which has dogged young designers emerging from college is the emphasis on the way they produce gimmicks and curiosities rather Certainly this is a way they have been much presented in the fashion press and the image has surely made it harder for them to get jobs in an industry where idiosyncracy is mistrusted. It has been galling to watch some of our most talented youngsters being snapped up by foreign companies which do appreciate the individualism they have learnt in our

Central to the success the young designer projects have is the attention they get from the fashion press. Fashion journalists are primary purveyors of conventional wisdom on what is happening stimulate new interests and demands and give the seal of approval to certain

The point made by Lauren Gordon is that Hyper Hyper should provide a centre where the best of young design exists and that this should help to make the press value it as a definite part of the fashion business.

So the fashion press plays a vital part in helping young designers to succeed, and at this point it seems relevant to ask how those who write on fashion are equipped for the responsible job of communicating the subject.

There are very few courses for aspirant fashion journalists. While the importance of a highly specialized, exacting training for those producing fashion is acknowledged and a good deal of money is put into teaching them, no such value is apparently placed on the skill with which the fashion press performs. Many people now doing the job have come from general journalism; others have come from public relations or different parts of the fashion siness and have a thorough grounding in fashion, but virtually none of the journalistic skills to do the job thoroughly. Many are good at what they do, but it is clear that others are handicapped by their lack of training.

So as a lecturer in journalism on one of the very few fashion communication courses which exist, at the London College of Fashion, the challenge to us has been to try and devise a curriculum which blends the knowledge of fashion with the journalistic skills necessary.

The course, which has been of one year's duration and is now to extend to two years under the new DATEC scheme, is an option slotted into a detailed fashion course covering design, fashion appreci-ation, the sociology of fashion, how the industry works, beauty therapy and cosmetics, as well as other general subjects.

Michael Talboys, head of design at LCF, who will oversee the DATEC fashion writers' course, see his job as developing a critical eye for fashion and encouraging students to question whether writers in the press are giving a comprehensive and accurate picture of contemporary design and ideas. He explains "Students tend to take what they see in the press as gospel and to assume they should copy. But in my view a lot of fashion writers get stuck on their favourite designers and do not represent the industry properly. "This can make it very difficult for new designers to break into the charmed circle, and it means fashion is presented in a limited way."

The journalism teaching is woven into the curriculum and the question loomed, when I first began teaching, how best to organize a syllabus which would provide a basic grounding in writing, researching, interviewing and investigative reporting, which I believe is essential for any area of journalism, and at the same time satisfy

The Israeli Defence Minister, Moshe Arens, one of those most likely to succeed Menachem Begin as Prime Minister, faces severe personal embarrassment if a planned international march goes ahead in Jerusalem on September 18. The march, in commemoration of last year's Beirut massacres, is being organized prinicipally by American anti-Zionists. They include Pro-fessor Richard Arens, the minister's brother. Other conveners of the march include the former US Attorney-General Ramsey Clark, and Bernadette McAliskey.

Wrong type

Norris McWhirter, editor of The Guinness Book of Records, is searching for the most rejected book in history. He has appealed to publishers to help him to verify a claim from the New York writer, Steven Goldberg that his book, The Inevitability of Patriarchy, is the most shunned book ever to have been printed. It had been turned down 69 times by 55 publishers before someone finally accepted it. The only record of this sort previously noted was held by W. E. E. Owens, who received 173 rejection slips before he finally gave up sending round his manuscript.

Underwhelmed

The New Statesman thinks it may have found another record in rejection from its close study of The Times Guide to the House of Commons. The magazine notes that Kathy Wilson, the Labour general election candidate in Isle of Wight, received just 2.4 per cent of the vote. "We think," ventures the States-"this is the lowest ever achieved by a Labour candidate in any parliamentary election." In the election, the book shows, Wilson's performance was bettered by, among others, the National Front candidate in Newham South (3.7 per cent), the Communist in Rhondda (2.8), and the ecologist in Ogmore, mid-

I forsook the Notting Hill Festival [again] this year for ethnic celebrations amid the quiet calm of the Suffolk reed-marshes. At Snape Maltings the closing concert in the Proms season was presented by an exuberant group of young blacks called Enkome, formed in the troubled St Paul's district of Bristol. In the first half a nine-man band presented an ear-splitting selection of high-life, reggae, love-rock and rasta music. The audience in the £7 seats suffered profound culture shock, and several produced little score-reading torches to study their programmes again, to check what on earth they had let themselves in for. The second half, of drummers and dancers flamboyantly recreating west African rhythms, was more to their taste. Mrs PHS, a fastidious critic, pronounced the show good enough for Sadler's Wells, while a few Suffolk matrons at the finale took to their feet and wagged their hips like Ghanaian market mommas. Bernard Levin: the way we live now

Darlings, you're not quite as wonderful as you think

There is an excellent article, writter with elegance and passion, in the current Listener, by Arnold Wesker, it is a formidable, fair and logically argued presentation of the theatre's case against the critics, and I have never seen it better done, or more worth replying to. Normally, I would not waste five minutes on the theatre's complaints about criticism particularly the complaints of Mr Wesker, who usually gives the impression that he believes the critics are engaged on a diabolical conspiracy to prevent the truth about his genius from reaching the world. But this time he has drawn up a real indictment, with real arguments, and landed some power-

His article is very loosely tied to a book of collected criticisms by Mr James Fenton (theatre reviewer of The Sunday Times), but he is, rightly, concerned to make a general case, not to find particular fault with Mr Fenton. Before I get to grips with his case. I must summarize it.

"Newspaper reviews", he say render the artist victim of a dangerous deception ... reviews are merely individual opinions whose importance is magnified out of proportion by print...like a tea-cher's report. Teachers must always be right, they've been appointed. The child can only ever be wrong." This deception, he argues, is reinforced by a public attitude which regards artistic activity as presump-"regards artistic activity as presumptuous". Living artists, he says,
"work in a continual state of original sin from which only a good review can redeem them... The reviewer is St George, print his sword! The reader, who thrills to a good thrashing, is on his side before he begins." Mr Wesker goes on to instance a woman of his acquaintance who had admired his work for 25 years but did not go to see his most recent play, Caritas, because of the unfavourable review it had received from Mr Fenton, who "wrote in such a way that I felt it wasn't for me". (To Mr Wesker, I recommend the reply of de Gaulle when Soustelle complained that all his friends were attacking him for supporting the General's Algerian policies: "Changez vos amis.")

Then Mr Wesker challenges a central claim made by Mr Fenton, and I think by most critics in one form or another (certainly I agree with it myself - Mr Fenton was, incidentally, my successor as theatre critic of The Sunday Times). Mr Fenton demands "the right to be wrong, the right to be unfair, the right to be overenthusiastic". And Mr Wesker asks: "At whose expense?", and goes on to say that "others pay a hidden price" for the

critic's luxury:

A year to write a play, a year before it's produced, then those unassailable reviews claiming the right to be unfait. Two years of work wiped out, two years more to wait... Livelihoods, cracked confidence, pain are involved... Mr Featon must be aware that he's doing more than simply exercising his right to be wrong... Could he cross his heart and deny that one tiny part of his ego rubbed its hands together, unacked its line and morniured "That'll make 'em sit en

Wesker: "Individual opinions magnified by print"

That, I think, gives a reasonably comprehensive account of Mr Wesker's review of reviewers. Before get to grips with the substance of it. there are a few lesser matters to get out of the way. Note first that Mr Wesker challenges Mr Fenton's right to be wrong, to be unfair"; but though he quotes also the third of Mr Fenton's claims, "the right to be overenthusiastic", he then falls silent on the subject. Now in the early 1960's, when Mr Wesker was starting in the theatre, with Roots, the Khan trilogy and The Kitchen, I was hugely and passionately overenthusiastic about Mr Wesker's plays; I had no doubt that his was a real talent, with real depth to it, and I climbed on to the housetops and shouted the news. But I never heard that Mr Wesker was offended by my praise, that he went about saying "How dare Levin say that these rough works, in which I am finding my playwright's feet, are of high quality? Such critics are damaging

This is not a quibble; the truth is that the theatre demands praise as its right, and genuinely believes that favourable reviews are only its due, while unfavourable ones are a kind of treachery. The old Broadway saying "If you ain't praising 'em, they ain't listening" has a core of literal truth; Mr Wesker claims that the theatre is self-critical, but it is about as self-critical as Louis XIV, and without unfair and wrongheaded critics it would eventually drown in the pool of Narcissus.

Furthermore, Mr Wesker's por-. trait of the gifted artist, poormouthed by the critics, starving in a garret, or even hanging himself from its beams ("Two years of work wiped out ... cracked confidence, pain ... "), besides being subject to the same test of even-handedness as the previous point (nobody ever heard a playwright, rejoicing at his new-found prosperity, declaring that the full houses from which he is coining money were filled by the words of the delightful, generous, point. What goes on behind the took a long time to write, or because phrase, no business of the critic. His duty is to deal with what comes over the footlights, and whether his review helps to establish or diminish a reputation or an income he is not to concern himself with such matters; that way self-corruption

But there are more important rguments in Mr Wesker's case, His first significant fallacy is his attitude to the influence of the critics. His foolish friend who stayed away was clearly influenced by an adverse review, but I must tell Mr Wesker, difficult though it may be for him to believe it, that Mr Fenton, having written his review, did not go and trand outside the low office with a stand outside the box office with a machine-gun threatening to mow down anyone attempting to buy tickets for the play, And Mr Wesker certainly won't believe this, but critics are not Manichees; though they are pleased when patrons buy tickets for plays they have praised, they are not at all upset when the same patrons buy tickets for plays they have excoriated.

Nor will the theatre believe (Mr Wesker says that "Every time a new, young critic takes over we brace ourselves fearing he is going to flex his muscles on us") that within about three weeks of taking up a critical appointment (during which he lambasts everything that moves) every critic starts to enter theatres on his knees, praying hysterically for something even half-way to tolerable that he can write about. The fact is that almost everything in the theatre is grossly overpraised by the critics, precisely because it is impossible to spend a wholly negative professional life and survive intact. (It was the relentless negativity in the plays that finally drove me to leave the reviewer's chair to Mr Fenton.) Mr Wesker will admit, if he is honest (he is), that most of what is put on in the theatre is rubbish without a redeeming feature; but he will make that admission only in general terms, and go on demanding that each particular play is worthy of respect from the critics because it

of the playwright's starving wife and

But there is another sense in which Mr Wesker misunderstands the critics' influence. Reviewing London plays for London audiences. there are about a dozen critics whose views command attention. Very, very rarely indeed do they agree, but let us say that they are unanimous on the striking demerits of play X by playwright Z, and with one accord characterize it as bilge. It closes instanter, and Mr Wesker brings in a coroner's verdict of murder by the critics. Is it not more likely that if a dozen people of widely different ages, politics, philosophies, outlooks, tastes, tempers, even sexes, agree that the play was bilge, it actually was bilge, and the true verdict should have been suicide by the theatre while of unsound mind? "Reviewers," says Mr Wesker, "like to delude themselves that they have a public who trusts them. But did anyone change papers because Fenton took over from Levin?" I've no idea, but the "delusion" is true, for all that No individual critic can have an influence on theatre attendances unless his readers have come to feel that he likes the kind of play they like themselves, and dislikes the kind they would wish to avoid; Sir Harold Hobson was a more influential critic on The Sunday Times than I was on the Daily Mail because a higher proportion of his readers shared his tastes. Mr Wesker, of course, may reply that he is talking only about the critic's influence on art, and that he is indifferent to such commercial considerations as the number of tickets sold; but if he does say that I shall extend my right index finger along the side of my nose, and wink with the other eye.

This argument can never end, but there is a reason for the perpetuum mobile. For the last fallacy in Mr Wesker's case is his implicit belief it runs beneath his whole argument like a subterranean river - that criticism is part of the theatre, and has obligations to it. But criticism is not in any way part of the theatre; for good or ill, it is part of journalism, and never the twain shall meet A critic's duty is first to the truth as he sees it ("and it shall follow as the night the day, thou canst not then be false to any man"), canst not then be second to his readers, but to the theatre, however disgusted and enraged the theatre may be at the fact, not at all.

T. C. Worsley, one of the finest of modern theatre critics, summed it all up when he said that theatre and critic could never be lasting friends. because they worked from different premises, which are embodied in their respective mortoes. The theatre's, he wrote, can be seen in letters of gold above every dressing-room door, and it reads "Darling, you were wonderful". But the critic as he dips his ill-paid pen into the ink, looks up at the poker-work motto on his desk, which reads 'Don't kid yourself; Keats died of

But the evidence in Beirut these past two months has contradicted this American diplomats in Beirut and Damascus now recognize that Gemayel's attempts to win the allegiance of his people have failed. They have yet to convince the State Department of this, least of all Mr Reagan, who still regularly and blandly announces that the United States stands four-square behind

Gemayel's government. It went wrong from the start. Israel had decided that a friendly Phalangist administration in Lebanon was in its interest - and in Washington's, Bashir Gemayel was daily elected, almost immediately assassinated and thus bequeathed the succession to his brother, Amin. Amin might just have performed a miracle, binding his broken country together with compassion and visible success. But, faced with the intransigence of the Syrians - the first nation to realize his weakness and Israel's demands for closer cooperation and friendship, he could neither break free from his Phalangist roots nor persuade his people to

While Chaffic Wazzan, Lebanon's Sumi Muslim prime minister, grew increasingly concerned at the alternation of both Sumi and Shia Muslims, Gemayel began to surround himself with old Phalangist comrades, with party apparatchics who still believed that the old Lebanon of Christian Maronite ascendancy and fendal rule must be restored. Generyel had thousands of American, French, Italian and British troops to put backbone into his regime. But his own power base contradicted this new-found pres-

The authorities did arrest a few guerrillas, but they made no aftempt to curb the Phalange militia. President Gennyci was told of this by the ambassadors of the four powers contributing troops to the peacekeeping force. The French envoy anguly sold him that the activities of his own accurity sutherities were staining not just his own presidency but the reputation of French troops. Gemayel's advisers dismissed soch complaints as

The trouble was that a new civil war had been gestating. Many of the Denzieme Burgan's arrests have taken place in Bourj al-Barajneh, the Shin stronghold of decaying houses and broken streets which became the centre of restanday's fighting.

The Sina want a greater say in a new Lebanda. So do the Druze, which is why Walid Jumblant's maintas have been refining to accept Lebanese jurisdiction in the Choul mountains when the Israeli army leaves. The Syriana, delighted at Genusyel's embanasament, have been stoking the coals, urging the Druze to ever greater resistance. The Israelis, who claim they want a strong and unfied Labanon under Gemayel ninks no secret in private that Gemayel's chances of success are now almost impossible. Thus they have been allowing heavy arms so reach the Druze militias in their area: a friendly Druze fieldom is likely to be more secure than a tottering Lebanese statelet north of the Israeli front lines.

Lebadoù may not have quite reached the end but it is the eleventh hour. Yesterday, true to its pledge, the American marine contingent responded to gunfire on its posi-tions, but the Cobra gunships that swept over west Berrut will have comented some dark ideas. To the Muslim and the Druze population, the Americans are now identified not just with Gemayel's government but with the Phalangist orthodoxy that hes behind it, with the status auc. with failure to reform Lebanon's social and political system.

Amin Gernayel himself is not a bad man; indeed, he is a man of remarkable integrity. But his ad-visers tell him that reform must come after sovereignty has been secured, and the Muslims realize that once the Maronite ascendancy is restablished, the need for reform will, in Christian eyes, grow correspondingly less important.

IREL.

Whether President Reagan grasps this is another matter. The fighting may again taper off, but only for an even shorter interval. An incipient civil war configure the Americans and, long before the presidential elections. Washington must decide elections. Washington must decide whose side it is on. It may already be place of interament in Turkey, provoked the following remark in a Times leader: "It will now be difficult for the rest of the world to accept the government that emerges from the Turkish elections (if they are held) as genuinely representative of the Turkish people. It is, of course, always difficult to know when a government is "genuinely representative" of a people. Nevertheless, having just discussed the question of the elections with leaders of the main Turkish parties, I must protest, not only at the naivety of the editorial comment carried by The Times, but also at the disingenuousness of the letter which prompted it.

When General Evran and his fellow officers took over the government of Turkey in September 1980, it was with considerable reluctance and after repeated and fruitless attempts to persuade the Prime Minister, Mr Demirel, and his leading opponent, Mr Ecevit, to cease the internecine strife which was tearing Parliament assister and join together in a government of national salvation. Carefully organized tactics of subversion had brought Turkey to the brink of anarchy. 24 people were dying each day at the hands of terrorists; schools, universities and places of work were at a standstill and the atmosphere everywhere was one of apprehension and dismay. During this period, Mr Demirel and Mr Ecevit, blithely indifferent to the impending disaster, devoted their prodigious energies to vilifying Times, each other. In other circumstances there could be no more justified employment of human energy. As it was, their actions served only to halt the workings of government, so leaving the Turkish people entirely at the mercy of terrorists and bandits.

One example may suffice: The two leaders came together on July 24, 1980, at the invitation of the acting President and agreed on emergency legislation. The whole country, which had ardently hoped for this legislation, was outraged by their subsequent bickering.

than the politicians whom they ousted. And, whatever criticisms may be made of them, they seem determined to return the country to civilian government. They now face the enormous problem of achieving that objective, without exposing the country once more to the chaos that almost submerged it. Evren's solu-tion has been to forbid the former politicians, who showed so little genuine concern for the nation's well-being, from returning to poli-tics. He has therefore retained the right to veto parties and their members. Demirel, who refused to obey an injunction forbidding him to make political statements, has also been interned.

Demirel's supporters have remained active, attempting to form a party - the Great Turkey Party -through which to prepare the ground for Demirel's eventual resurgence. In order to make their meaning clear they adopted a flag bearing a picture of an iron hand (demir el). The President, who perceived the meaning, vetoed the party.

No grief is more clamorous than that of the frustrated politician, and the long, whining letter which came to The Times protesting about the fate of the Great Turkey Party is no exception. Those familiar with Turkish politics should also feel little surprise at the letter's mendacity. It even goes so far as to accuse General Evren of being prepared to countenance only those party leaders hand-picked by himself an accusation repeated by The

The freedom to form political parties was in fact withheld only from politicians associated with Turkey's recent disorder, together with those - such as fascists and communists - who lack the concept of legitimate opposition; and those such as Islamic fundamentalists who seek to renounce the Ataturkist principle of secular government. In the event only three parties were able to meet the deadline, two of them centre-right, the other centreleft. A fourth, the left-leaning Social Democracy Party, was crippled at the last minute, after 37 of its leaders Ecevit's party even tabled a had been vetoed - a move which, whether or not justified, was undeniably heavy-handed. The hobbling of Rome's light cavalry

As the Jesuits prepare to elect a new leader, Peter Nichols chronicles the strains in their relations with the Pope

The Jesuits are gathering for their General Congregation here on Thursday to elect a new Superior General to lead this most formidable of the Roman Catholic Church's religious orders.

Whoever emerges with the necessary absolute majority will inherit a situation without precedent in the 442 years of the order. All that can be said about him at this point is that he will almost surely be one of the 220 electors because no Superior General has yet been found outside the General Congregation.

His election will follow the resignation of the Spanish Father Pedro Arrupe, something which has never happened before in the order's affairs. Most fascinating of all will be the new Superior General's approach to the Pope and the Holy See, given that two years ago the Pontiff did what no other Pope has done and imposed on the Jesuits a temporary leader of his own choosing.

The Jesuits have passed through a humiliating two years since October 1981 when Pope John Paul II took a heavy hand in the order's affairs. The previous year Father Arrupe had decided to resign because of advancing age. As a matter of courtesy, he informed the Pope. Already the two men were on unsatisfactory personal terms. The Pope, practically from the moment of his election, was noticed to have severe misgivings about the Jesuits. The Pope instructed Father Arrupe to halt the arrangements he had made for a General Congregation to announce his retirement.

On August 7 1981, Father Arrupe suffered a stroke from which he has still not fully recovered. When the state of his health was clear, he appointed Father Vincent O'Keefe, the most experienced of his four assistant-generals, to lead the order until a new Superior General had been chosen.

The Pope intervened again. On October 5, 1981, he wrote a letter to the sick Father Arrupe putting aside the Superior General's arrangements and appointing Father Paolo Dezza, an octogenarian Jesuit with long experience at the papal court, as temporary head of the order. The Pope appointed as Dezza's deputy, Father Giuseppe Pittau, 51, the order's provincial in Japan who had caught the Pope's eye during his visit there. The Pope reserved the members of the General Congre-

Father Arrupe, who has resigned because of ill health, welcomes the Pope to the Jesuits' headquarters in January last year. Right, Father Pittan, a possible successor who has the Pope's blessing would be allowed a General Congregation to elect their leader. The Pope's assault on the order was based on two issues. He objected to the deep involvement of some Jesuits in social questions and politics, in particular in Central America. That involvement was highlighted, when the late Archbishop Romero of San Salvador turned strongly against the El Salvador government because of the murder of one of his parish priests, a Jesuit. The archbishop himself was later murdered.

The second point at dispute is less easily definable: it appears that the Pope objected to the liberal teachings being built up in Father Arrupe's statements and writings. The Pope is said to have seen in these collections something akin to a rival authority. Certainly the men were very distant. The Pope opposes political roles for priests with the exception, of course, of Poland. The last talk which Father Arrupe gave a matter of hours before his stroke was taped in Bangkok and this final address includes such characteristic remarks as these: "Should we help spiritually the guerrillas in Latin America? No? Well, I cannot say 'no' . . . if you have a wounded person even if he were a guerrilla, you have to help him. That is the meaning of being a good Samaritan. Is that political? People say so. No. I am a priest. I am helping this poor man here. I don't care if he were a guerrilla, religious or non-Catholic. He is a poor man. He is a poor man who is

The broader significance of the Pope's clash with the Jesuits is seen by some of them to go beyond the differences between an authoritarian pontiff and the "Black Pope" as the esuit Superior general is frequently described. They say that the Pope is more than ready to tell them what they are doing wrong but not what they should be doing. And that impasse, they maintain, is common throughout the Catholic Church.
One of the few definitions of the Pope's thinking comes from Father Pittau, who is now acting leader.

Commenting on the Pope's request that the Jesuits interest themselves in the initiatives put forward by the Second Vatican Council, he said: "We used to be the light cavalry, out in front. Then the Holy Father ordered us to dismount." His statement that the Pope does not like a vanguard, but a Church which moves like a convoy, hints at regret despite the fact that Father Pittan was the Pope's own

Will he be the next Superior General? His is certainly one of the names most heard. Yet his nomination would suggest that the order was going a very long way to please the Pope.

Yet the Jesuits do want to please the Pope in the sense that they have vowed obedience to him. They also regard themselves as the papacy's most powerful force, and have shown by their outward calm that if the Pope had expected a rebellion. he has seriously misunderstood the

NIBBLING AT BENEFITS

The level of social security payments to the poor and unemployed cannot be conany amount currently paid is a thick compound of adjustments for inflation over the years plus some real growth which only with difficulty can be linked to the objective measurements of subsistence made in the first days of National Assistance in the 1940s? Besides, Department of Health and Social Security (DHSS) local offices provide an array of discretionary payments for rent and heating and travel. They complicate the picture and make most statements about 'the dole" a highly simplified account of the position of the elderly and indigent who depend on state

These considerations apply to all classes of beneficiary but, as politicians of all parties have shown themselves aware, social security recipients differ in their public esteem. The elderly not only have votes and lobbyists but a range of formidable allies including several of the most venerable attractions of the upper house of Parliament Children have no votes; they rely, shakily, on politicians' sense of family. When children become adolescent, their political interest declines further, until they become old enough to vote.

It is within this context that the DHSS is said to be studying a reduction in the benefits paid to young people both by adjusting the basic rate (currently £15.80 a week for 16-year-old living in the parental home) and cutting the the level of subsistence tolerable and to all claimants living away sidered a "principle" in and of from home. The motive for such itself. How could that be when a reduction is primarily to allow a reduction is primarily to allow. the DHSS to offer a meaty sacrifice on the altar of the Public Expenditure Survey Committee. This, from Whitehall's point of view, has the merit of being seen to hurt (the Treasury is never convinced unless there are screams) but also, more important for the long run; to establish the violability of basic social benefits and do it for a group over which the political screams will not be too loud.

> There are broader reasons for reviewing the level of payments to young people. Mrs Thatcher has raised the issue of the existence of a growing "culture" of youth unemployment where reliance on public doles has become an acceptable if not especially comfortable way of life. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has toyed with the theory that social security, at least for young people, is above the market clearing rate for youth jobs and so should be cut. This is fine as a theory but is short of experimental evidence; and there are qualifications to be Going to work imposes vari-. ous "non-wage" costs on both employer and employee which nullify any straight comparison of dole and take-home pay. Ministers also seem reluctant to accept that the remuneration in the low-wage jobs they want young people to take (where such jobs exist) may actually be below rental allowances payable both in a civilized society. Making to 18-year-olds living at home unemployed 18 year olds hungrier or depriving them of the cigarettes or occasional drink or whatever else the "excess" element in social security provides will not necessarily turn them into eager job-seekers and meek employees. On the contrary this could be a recipe for breakdown of social discipline.

> Before the supplementary benefit paid to the young unemployed is singled out as an "easy" cut, the DHSS should be quite clear what it is doing. Many of these young unem-ployed live in households where social security is the staple income. Cutting benefits or rent allowances might not only hurt the poorest families but generate additional tensions between parents and their adolescent children.

> The DHSS might think that, by simultaneously cutting con-tributions towards the rents of young people who have moved from the parental home, policy will keep families together. Such a result seems unlikely and moreover will act as a major check on the mobility of labour. That might be a realistic recognition of the convergence of regional unemployment rates but it flies in the face of ministerial rhetoric about people moving in search of jobs. To lock the young unemployed into low-income family settings could reinforce the very culture of dependency the Prime Minister is concerned about - and rightly, for it shades into one of poverty, criminality and informal tax-free employment.

Such lawful terminations of pregnancy as are performed on Irish women are performed over the water. Official English statistics for 1981 showed 3,600 abortions for women with Irish addresses. The figure is thought to understate the true position.

It is not clear why it should be necessary to embed in the constitution a state of affairs that already exists, especially as there. has been no sign of any credible challenge to it. It is even less of winning the trust and regard clear what practical effect, if any, the proposed change would have. The political parties are. not campaigning, a mark of their embarrassment as well as the exhaustion of their funds. But there are plenty to take their place, lawyers, clergy, gynaecologists and obstetricians, replete with expert and contradictory advice. Underlying the argument is a virtual consensus that there should be no major relaxation of the present law. But there is sharp and socially divisive controversy about the advisability of this way of proceeding.

The campaign for entrenchment of the prohibition had its origin in American experience. Courts there had found reason in the constitution of the United States to set aside laws enforcing an unconditional bar to abortion. Ireland too bas a written constitution which inscribes certain individual rights in the broadest terms. The Irish Supreme Court has shown some inclination to tread the constructivist path of its American cousin. It was by that route that the Republic's restrictive law on the sale of contraceptives came to be rewritten (after a fashion, by Mr Haughey when minister of health, offering "an Irish solution to an Irish problem").

There is also the European Court of Human Rights which. though it has no direct powers of enforcement, is happy to intervene in such matters, as evidenced by its censure of the Northern Ireland law relating to homosexual practices.

An organization was formed to block these possibilities, and it was enthused by the desire for a grand gesture to show that Ireland at least stood fast by the moral law when Italy itself had fallen to the abortionists and even Catholic Spain was at risk. Hence the amendment.

For Dr FitzGerald this commitment. trolled the matter in Britain until which he doubtless judged to be the passage of Mr David Steel's unavoidable, has been a sore embarrassment.

> The hallmark of his first short period as prime minister was his "constitutional crusade" to purge the Irish constitution (de Valera's handiwork, 1937) of its confessional and blatantly irredentist elements, for the dual purpose of making it more fit for the plural democracy Ireland now purports to be and making it more palatable to unionist opinion in the North. Dr FitzGerald sought thereby to further his long-term aim of promoting Irish unity by means of Protestant fellow-Irishmen in Ulster.

> That was Dr FitzGerald's first premiership. His second began with the necessity to discharge a commitment to move in the contrary direction in a spectacufar fashion. He wriggled. His law officers told him that the form of words introduced in a Bill by Mr Haughey as his expiring action was incompetent for its purpose. Dr FitzGerald adopted that view and has spoken of "fatal defects" in the formula: on one interpretation it might be held to admit abortion at any stage of preg-nancy prior to the stage at which the foetus becomes capable of being born; on another interpretation it might outlaw methods of contraception now in use and medical practice which at pre-sent protects the lives of pregnant women - termination of ectopic pregnancies and in cases of cancer of the womb; and it would preclude the legislature from correcting that consequence were it to occur.

Dr FitzGerald put forward another, less ringing, form of words, but he could not carry all his party with him and he lost it in the Dail by 22 votes. So he has the ignominy of presenting Mr Haughey's words to the electorate, and the paradox to perform of advising them to turn down what he presents. One consequence already visible which many Irishmen regret is the emergence of a straight Catholic/Protestant split over an issue affecting the constitution. The Protestant churches have a common position. They neither seek nor approve an open abortion policy such as has become established in England. They differ from the prevalent Roman Catholic teaching in taking a somewhat less restrictive view of the circumstances in which termination of pregnancy the constitution, a document common to all citizens, the moral position of one church however dominant its position. This is the first time in the history of the state that the Profesiona churches have taken concerted action on a politicized issue. They have been rebuffed by the parliament and are likely to be by a majority in the referendum.

The professor of pastoral theology in Trinity College Dublin has said that most Protestants will feel somewhat alienated in the state if the amendment goes through. That may be pitching it a bit high. But the feeling of revisiting an earlier, more clerical, phase of Irish independence is tangible, and for some oppressive.

It must be said however that the Irish Roman Catholic bishops have avoided the role that a straight reversion to the past would have given them. The occasional bishop has let fly by equating, say, a Yes vote with support "for the rights of God"; and some of the parochial clergy have sought to bind consciences from their pulpits (and seen a few of their parishioners walk out of the church in protest). But collectively the hierarchy has been neither voluble nor over-

While proclaiming the moral law on behalf of their church and calling by implication for a decisive Yes, the bishops have gone out of their way to emphasize that they recognize the right of each person to vote according to conscience; and they have acknowledged that those who oppose the amendment are not necessarily in favour of relaxation of the law. The last point is a necessary correction of what the rougher campaigners are shouting. The bishops also have more to say than many about society's duty to alleviate the distress of women who may feel driven to seek abortion.

The bishops do not wish to be seen calling the tune or swinging their croziers. Nor are they, nor have they need to. Their conduct, the courteous though pained remonstrances of the Protestant church bodies, the absence from the fray of most of the more inflamatory politicians, and the low level of public engagement, may help to limit the ill effects on Irish political society of this introspective interlude. Moreover, the campaign is helping to establish the proposition that the relationship between the moral law as defined by the church and the civil law as enforced by the state is not one of necessary identity. The passage of this amendment would not foreclose the outcome of the next round, which is likely to be Getting it down on paper

From Mr Brian Clouston Sir, This country imports over 90 per cent of its forest products, much of it in the form of paper and pulp for papermaking, at the huge annual cost of £2.5bn. Current world predictions indicate that available timber will become scarce by the turn of the century with major suppliers, such as the United States, ceasing export of forest products altogether.

In Scandinavia plans now in hand will turn large tracts of forest land over to the production of biomass to meet energy needs. Russia has reacted to market forces already by doubling the price of exported

Is it not time for Government to take a serious look at three related aspects of our nation's timber and paper industries:

First, in the knowledge that timber for papermaking will be extremely scarce by the end of this century, to looking again at planting the millions of wasted areas in upland Britain, and perhaps also at an urban forestry programme. We now export pulpwood to Scandinavia so there can't be much wrong with the product we grow.

Secondly, to increase efforts in recycling waste paper. Britain currently leads Europe in this field, but more salvage could be achieved and more recycling plants built. Thirdly, by examining the use of straw cellulose in papermaking Denmark produced quality paper from straw. The technology is available, so is the straw, in vast quantities. By reinvesting money, gained from the sale of state-owned assets, in the nation's timber, paper and salvage industries massive savings could be achieved in imports and many thousands of permanent jobs There was something of this philosophy in Roosevelt's "new deal"; the Conservation Corps planted hundreds of thousands of acres of trees on America's wasted acres, engaging the services of three-quarters of a million unemployed. Mrs Thatcher's Government should now consider a similar programme of investment in the creation of a renewable resource for Britain. Yours faithfully, BRIAN CLOUSTON Immediate Past President The Landscape Institute,

Spirit of Helsinki

From Lord Beswick Sir, Admittedly I judge from ing, but am I entirely wrong in thinking that there was something significantly good about that gathering at Helsinki – the extra appreciative spectators and the effort of those competitors from over 100 different countries. Could it not be rewarding to have a study in some depth of the features of that international event?, For example, the communist successes seem to result from a quite deliberate policy of directing human effort into athletic experience. Is that policy to be reconciled with the evil nature which Western propaganda would have us believe is inherent in the communist system?

Then it would also seem that the USA successes were disproportionately gained by their coloured citizens. Is this entirely due to some superior physical attribute of the Negro or are the white majority, in the main, motivated by different factors?

Also, despite some bumping and spiking. I for one got the impression of really heart-warming honest effort and sportsmanship which contrasted sharply with the squalid bad temper which one can see among some of the actual or aspiring millionaires at

In Britain, one day, when we have given up the idea of finding social salvation by cutting the PSBR and furthering privatization, we shall want to concentrate more improving the quality of life. The study I suggest of that experience in Helsinki might well yield useful Your faithfully,

FRANK BESWICK, House of Lords. August 16.

Religion and ratings

From Mr Paul Neuburg Sir, On the question of the ratings problems of ITV's religious pro-grammes, Mr Angus Wright, Head of Religious Programmes at Television South, writes (August 22): "No doubt the apparent progressive rundown in resources and production values of the principal occupants of the 6 pm Sunday slot has contributed to the negative ratings situation there."
As editor of Credo, the principal occupant of ITV's Sunday 6 pm slot (till now), I would like to assure Mr Wright that there has been no progressive rundown of resources available to the programme. Whether or not the change from documentary to analytical-type programmes is a running down of production values is a matter of opinion. A wide range of people, from our religious advisers to the overwhelming majority of viewers who write in, do not appear to think

Its effect on the size of the viewership can, however, be assessed from the ratings. These show that in the past programme year, during which Credo has had its new format, it has done every bit as well in the face of competition as have religious programmes that have carried on in the documentary style.

In the winter, when Credo's place was taken by Central's documentary-type ligious programme, Encounter, playing against the news and the Holiday programme on BBC1, Encounter, too, held on to an average of about half the audience it inherited.

The Other Side of Me, a documentary-type religious programme from Mr Wright's own stable, which followed Encounter, slightly increased ITV's ratings in the face of slightly weaker compe-tition (Songs of Praise) and with overall viewership figures rising towards the evening peak. When Credo came back to the 6 pm slot in the spring, playing against The Antiques Road Show on BBC 1 (preceded by the news) it once again

Film makers appeal for support

From Mr Lindsay Anderson and

Sir, We write to you as British film makers, members of Britain's film industry, of widely differing am-bitions, qualities and achievements. One conviction, however, we all share. We all believe passionately and urgently in the importance of film production, both as a national economic asset and as a manifes tation of our country's cultural and imaginative health.

It is habitual to accuse artists of impracticality and self-indulgence. These are precisely the charges we level against governments and other political organisations which have failed – and which continue to fail – so significantly to tackle the problems of British film production and to support British film makers.

This Government, priding itself on its economic realism and hardness of head, has publicly expressed its belief in the continued existence of a British film industry. How to achieve this?

Some encouragement has been offered in terms of tax incentive. There is something to be said for this concept of capital allowance; but as anyone connected with the film industry knows - and particularly the lawyers who grow fat on the rich compost of documentation profits from films subsidised in this way end up either in off-shore tax havens or in the United States. Assistance of this kind provides no real philosophy, no structure which can assure the all-important conti-nuity of product which alone will ensure the survival of British film making.

There are some remedial steps which only inertia can delay.

The Eady Levy should immediately be extended to all sources of film exhibition. We live in the video age now. More people are seeing and enjoying and being affected by films than ever before. Yet only 3 per cent of the films viewed in this country are now being seen in cinemas. Is it not ludicrous that only cinemas should contribute to the Eady Fund? The levy should be extended immediately to manufacturers and distributors of blank video tape, as is being done elsewhere with considerable success.

Much more fundamental, and much more important, is the function of the National Film Finance Corporation, its survival and its necessity for a continuing British film industry. Our European competitors and (sometimes) friends have long recognized that some organization of this kind is essential if their film makers are to survive. And survive not merely domestic economic bazards, but the ever-increasing economic power (based 162-170 Wardour Street, W1.

Mr Hodgson's appointment to the Department of Industry's Project and Export Policy Division hopefully is a forerunner of many other similar appointments.

As to the thorny problems of overnment intervention into industry's efforts abroad. I firmly believe that there is no question of having to agonise intellectually over this. The word "intervene" often conjures up "government interference". Quite wrongly so. Government can be most helpful to industry by inter-vening and assisting in obtaining major turn key projects, and again French industry is a good example, having had the benefit of government intervention over years and achieving some spectacular successes.

From Mr James Macfarlane

Sir, Golden handshakes affront not only the institutions and smaller shareholders. They also offend those many whose careers have been damaged and finances permanently worsened by a redundancy oc-casioned not by their incompetence but often by the mistakes of the very management which votes itself the contracts which produce these handshakes.

It is not simply a question of equity, of a more equal bearing of the burdens of industrial decline or In the ment are happy to celebrate British film-making successes over the last few years, and with justification — Chariots of Fire, Gregory's Girl and Gandhi are notable instances, The two latter films owed their very existence to the British and Indian National Film necessary restructuring. You ask for a balance to be drawn between the discipline to perform and financial protection for those taking the career risk of a difficult job.

Such risks are not only borne by those in major boardrooms. Indeed the greatest career risks are asked of men and women in their thirties and early forties moving into positions of real decision and exposure just below that level.

They are the ones with, comparatively, the greater personal commitments and for whom failure can be a catastrophe and not just a blow to their pride. They are the ones who need some financial protection if they are to consider the career risk sensible. Increasingly they do not find it so.

A fundamental motor of capitalism is reward for success and penalty for failure. Where we have a system which allows a few to gain great rewards for success but almost totally protect themselves from failure, while imposing the opposite on others, we should not be surprised if the motor is running

Cost of motorways

From the President of the Institution of Civil Engineers

Sir, While recognising the importance of the environment to the lifestyle of the whole community, it is important to reply to Mr Harrison's attack on motorways in The Times of August 17. Has he forgotten how unbearable and unsafe were conditions on many of our roads before we started building our minimal motorway system? Of course we need efficient public transport, and of course we should use the railways as much as is viable, or even perhaps as much as possible, but the need for good roads remains.

One can support his plea for us to adopt a sustainable lifestyle, but with over 50 million of us in these islands the only system sustainable without motorways requires, as in the past, cheap coal, cheap railways, the immobility of most of the population in cities or on farms, and the absence of competition overseas. None of these factors now apply. His proposition is therefore unsustainable and insupportable.

In any event, the major problem of transportation in our society lies within urban areas, as explained on the back page of The Times of the same date. Yours faithfully,

JOHN V. BARTLETT, President, The Institution of Civil Engineers, Great George Street, SW1.

Britain's Nato role From Dr Geoffrey Lee Williams

Sir. Your editorial (August 17) contends that Britain's role in Nato should move away from a commitment to a Continental strategy and be concentrated in the maritime area. This would then substantially leave our Continental allies, notably West Germany, with the land desence of the central front of Nato with BAOR acting as a tactical reserve for the whole of Northern Army Group.

Such a move, you further contend, would not really undermine the operational logic of the strategy of forward defence in West inspired by political and not military considerations. Quite so. But the forward strategy is also related to the concept of the pause which is a political requirement in crisis management which might allow war in Erope to be quickly liquidated as the unacceptable costs of its continuence mounts.

This is the deterrent aspect of Nato's war-fighting capability which lies at the heart of the strategy of the flexible response. To redefine this posture by thrusting the burden of maintaining it on West Germany in pursuit of defence economies must therefore be justified in strategic

However, you offer no real strategic rationale for your proposed repudiation of Britain's current role in Nato, except the vague reference to the Falklands crisis as an "unpredictable event" arising outside the Nato area. But surely your basic proposition is flawed because there can be no formal agreement that the non-Continental powers should specialise in naval and strike forces, while the Continental ones concentrate on soldiers and interception forces, since (as the logic of the "forward strategy" and of the "pause" ensures) ground and forward air forces are a hostage to collective security. To try and unravel the illogicality of the forward strategy is also likely to expose the logic of the "pause" which raises even more complex problems. Surely, given Nato's consistently reiterated commitment to deterrence, Britain's Rhine Army is no more or less a "strategic untouchable" than the 350,000 American army in Bavaria? Yours faithfully,

Talks tackle 'justification by faith'

New talks start in Venice today between official representatives of the Roman Catholic Church and the Anglican Communion, with two of the most controversial issues between the churches high on the agenda.

The Anglican Roman Catholic International Commission will launch the second stage of theological negotiations with a study of justification by faith, and of the barriers to American boly recognition of Anglican holy

The first issue was central to the Reformation, with Martin Luther insisting on "salvation by faith alone" and accusing the Popes of teaching "salvation by good works".

In practical terms, the second issue has been an even greater bone of contention, particularly in the Church of England. The papal bull of 1896, which declared that Anglican orders were void, caused dence that the different under-standings of the theology of The so justification can be brought theory, that together into one one statement, though in some quarters in the Church of England there is considerable scepticism.

Galleries: John Russell Taylor visits new shows in Edinburgh and London

The Scottish connexion flung far and wide

If Vienna 1900 is the central thread of the Edinburgh Festival this year, Scotland is not much less prominently displayed. It has not always been so; sometimes the main complaint of locals and visitors alike has been that the international definition of the festival cemed to take in just about every country in the world except Scotland. But nowadays the Scottish connexion is on occasion almost frantically insisted upon. With Vienna 1900 it is quite legitimately there: after all, it was in Vienna, in 1900, that Mackintosh and his followers first made their major international mark. But one may doubt whether there is much real relevance to the Scottish art scene in the work of Paul-Emile Borduns, at the Talbot Rice Art Centre until September 10, even though it is dutifully insisted on in the notes on the exhibition and he did once paint something mysteriously entitled The Scotsman Rediscovers America.

Scottish links or no. Borduas is a very enteresting painter well worthy of our closer acquaintance (unlike Jack Bush, the last Canadian abstractionist to whom Edinburgh paid tribute). This show begins with one of his first nonfigurative works, dating from 1942, and follows his evolution from a kind of 'surrealist" abstraction he called "automatisme" to something very close to New York Abstract Expressionism. while he was actually in New York (1953-1955), and then to a very French sort of Tachisme, working in great sensuous patches of almost mono-chrome paint, while he was in Paris for the last five years of his life. One may, of course, sense here something of the Canadian dilemma, that of trying to retain individuality and consistency while living on the cultural fringes of the United States and of France (Borduas obviously feels it, even if he is a strong without necessarily reading similar problems into the work of Scottish

Even in a show like Robert Scott Lauder's Masterclass at the National Gallery, which I wrote about at length a month ago (it runs until Ocober 2), we may note the almost inevitable move south of these late nineteenth-century Edinburgh painters, and yet feel that they had no trouble retaining their Scottish individuality and remaining within a definably Scottish tradition. A line of continuity is drawn between at least one of their number, MacTaggart, through the Scottish Colourists and more recent painters such as Joan Eardley to some of our youngest contemporaries in a show at the 369 Gallery in the High Street until September 10, and defined by the title as Scottish Expressionism. And the major shows of current Scottish painters, those devoted to Robin Philipson at the Scottish Gallery in George Street and to John Houston at the Mercury Gallery on the Mound, clearly re-emphasize the continuity and the separateness of twentieth-century Scottish painting.

Though Philipson is past president of the Royal Scottish Academy, there is nothing stuffy and academic about his work, with its often menacing animal imagery, its croticism, its intense and brooding colour. Houston is in many ways the more relaxed painter, but an expressionist strain can be detected in him also: some of the superb seascapes in the present show make one think of Nolde, he can invest even a vase of flowers with an electric tension, and he seems to have found a new source of inspiration in the New York social scene without ever being in any danger of looking, even faintly, like a New York

It is no doubt a pity that a projected Scottish Arts Council show of Scottish Art Now fell through, and has had to be replaced by a show of Sandro Chia at the Fruitmarket (unit September 17), though Chia looks very well divorced from the rest of the Zeitgeist group and also surprisingly at home in close proximity to the new Scottish ex-pressionists. But the flag is kept flying in a very striking display of recent work from Four Scottish Print Workshops at the Academy, and a rather lack-lustre collection of Scottish Crafts Now at the City Art Centre, where the workman-ship is generally fine but the taste somehow stuck in the Scandinavian

Also at the City Art Centre is the Hundertwasser show we recently suffered in London, including (unless it has been eliminated on the way north) his rejected design for a Monton Rothschild wine label. To see what they accepted, from whom, you need only walk a block or so to the Royal Scottish Academy, where the grand central hall is occupied until September 10 by a collection of box frames each of which contains the label, the original painting (when available), alternative designs, if any, and documentation for a particular year. The main year. The main succession is from 1945 to 1981, and the works are unashamedly minor, chips from the artist's workbench. But there is considerable interest in seeing how artists as disparate as Braque and Warhol, Dali and Moore, Chagail and Soulages, responded to this unlikely commission.

Sometimes the original is splendid but, like Warhol's triple portrait of the Baron Philippe, difficult to accommodate on the label; others, like Braque's tiny sketch, are no more than scribbles on a menu card after a good meal. Unexpectedly, Moore seems to manage the best belance, taking it seriously but not too seriously and producing three exquisite ministure possibilities; he certanty earned his ten cases Sackler Collection, all of them in immaculate condition and of superb quality, which will be on show at the City Art Centre until October 2, and, at the other end of the scale, Action Portraits, a collection of Scottish press photography at the National Portrait Gallery until October 9, which plucks some amazing images out of the daily round. It will also be interesting to see how traditionally puritan Edinburgh reacts to the photographs of Robert Mapplethorpe at the new Stills Gallery, until September 17, with a catalogue cheerily comparing his celebrations of male genitalia with the art of the gay porno artist Tom of Finland. But I fear more detailed consideration must await the show's arrival at the ICA in November.

Manet at Work National Gallery

Britain could hardly hope to mark the centenary of Manet's death with anything half so spectacular as the definitive Grand Palais show in Paris. But the occasion could hardly go unnoted, and the National Gallery has stepped into the breach with a small but very revealing show, entitled Manet at Work (until October 9).

The point is that the National Gallery itself owns four important Manets, Music in the Tuileries Gardens, The Waltress, the Portrait of Eva Gonzalès and the four fragments of the most ambitious Execution of Maximilian salvaged and reassembled by Degas after Maner's death. It also has ready access Also recommended for the Edinburgh Dejeuner sur l'herbe and has been able to art.

borrow a handful of less familiar works from private collections and from the Davies Collection in the National Museum of Wales. These, then, form the nucleus of the show, but what the organizers do is cunningly fill in the background of each painting with sketches, comparable graphics and photographs of other versions where they exist, and generally trace for us the genesis of the paintings on show as well as demonstrating how they fit into the overall development of Manet's style. Some details are very revealing. For example, they show one of Manet's most Monet-influenced and evidently Impressionist paintings, The Banks of the Seine at Argenteuil (1874), painted virtually side-by-side with Monet and probably using Monet's wife and son as models for the figures in the foreground. But along with it is Cardiff's Boats at Argenteuil, clearly of the same scene at the same time, minus figures, and painted in a much more typically Manet-like style. In all other respects it looks like the sketch, so one cannot help wondering whether this is what Manet naturally painted very rapidly, on the spot, and the more elaborate piece was deliberately worked up later in the approved plein-air style of little broken strokes of colour, as against the sketch's altogether drabber colouring and flatter application of paint. Do the two pictures show that already Manet realized that one convention was much like another, and none was to be taken dogmatically as the only possible artistic truth?

Very likely, for Manet seems to have been one of the most intelligent and constructively self-conscious of painters. What we see on all sides here is intelligence at work directing instinct - a lesson usefully abstracted from the grander effects of the Paris show, and well worth repeating on a smaller scale

Sibelius revelation

CBSO/Rattle Festival Hall

One of the many odd things about Sibelius is that, the better his music is performed, the more difficult it is to understand. Any number of conductors can show his Fifth Symphony as a triumph of heroism, his Sixth as Olympic games in fairyland, his Seventh as a long labouring collosselly gratified. But these, perhaps, are the symphonics Sibelius wished to write: the ones he actually composed are a great deal more enismatic as indeed they appeared in the magnificent and important concert with which Simon Rattle brought his direc-torship of South Bank Summer

Music to an end on Sunday. Simply to play these last three symphonies together is a feat in itself, but the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra have proved before that they thrive on so challenging a programme when Mr Rattle is conducting, and the sponded with mounting concen-tration. The works also hang together as symphonies of selfcon-sciousness and doubt, for, after the bleak experience of his Fourth, Sibelius discovered that symphonic composition entailed not making statements but asking

Mr Rattle's understanding of this was most clearly demon-strated at the end of the Fifth Symphony, where he undercut the rolling majestic optimism by letting us hear the discordant, trombones. The grand gesture was made, but made without full conviction, and not weakened but positively strengthened by its uncertainty. It followed that the proper ending should be the unfinished thand sounded in repeated upbeat, and here fercely strong. The silences after each repetition seemed to be daring the music to end in this way. Its final capitulation was grim.

Other hidden voices came ou in the frequent passages of quick-revolving ostinato in the strings. Mr Rattle sees these not as mere background but as the noise made by people waiting to do some-thing. They may be interested in what is happening elsewhere (this is so much and so fruitfully an orchestra that listens), or they may just be hanging about, or they may be exasperated by inactivity. They are never, though, wasting time, or letting the music slip by without as much audience on this occasion re- as possible of its meaning being

> Such richness characterized the concert, bringing us a Sixth Symphony of complete strangeness and a Seventh that, so far from reaching its goal, ended with a mighty shrug of frustration and despair. After that there seems nothing to explain in the fact Sibelius lived another thirty years without releasing an Eighth,

Sinfonietta/Rattle Festival Hall

Having encountered each other politely in separate halves on Thursday, Brahms and Schoenberg met head on in Saturday night's South Bank Summer Music concert, when one of the great freaks of musical history stalked across the Festival Hall stage. Schoenberg's orchestral version of Brahms's G minor Piano Quartet is a lovable, misshapen creation, an Elephant Man of a symphony which one would be inclined to call a masterpiece did it not so often induce a mixture of amazement and hilarity.

has readily transformed itself into an opera and symphony orchestra, is not quite ready to become a stylish classical band. Haydn's Symphony No 67 received a ropy performance it would be better to forget, in which string intonation was less than acceptable. Matters improved under the influence of Alfred Brendel's concentrated, perfectly judged, frighteningly intense account of Mozart's last piano concerto: Brendel reached through the surface simplicity to the complexities underscath, but did not quite succeed in returning to recapture the simplicity as well.

Television Atoning evasively

You could not wish for a neater illustration of the genial humber which pervades much of Private Eve than the surely not accidental coincidence this week of a childish lampoon of Motives (BBC2) and the uncomfortable appearance on that selfsame programme of the edilor of Private Eye.

Despite his opening declaration that he was perfectly happy to talk about himself Richard Ingrams gave away as little as he possibly could; the interest of the pro-gramme was largely due to relentless and intelligent pressure from Anthony Clare. If it has often seemed unfair that Ingrams should alone enjoy the privilege of publicly roasting his enemies month after month, year after year, his voluntary submission to this no-holds-barred interrogation was atonement enough.

Clare got absolutely nowhere with his preliminary questions about Ingrams's socially secure and religious background: no mystery about the origins of those famous moral prejudices. Did his background make it hard for him to understand people who had had tougher lives? Maybe, but in the army he had met all sorts said Ingrams, thus turning the psychological question into a more able social one.

Did he agonize much over causing pain? Second evesion: Ingrams professed surprise at how seldom people sued (as though unaware that most of his victims dare not do so). Was not Private Eve extremely powerful? Third evasion: not really, papers cannot bring down governments. (Coy, said Clare; why are you reluctant to admit your own effectiveness?) Why was Ingrams so intolerant of homosexuals? Fourth evasion: because of their political propagands (as though Private Eye's queer-bashing did not long predate the emergence of gay lib). Ingrams opined that homosexuality was an mmanural, destruc-tive egotistical thing and that the homosexuals he knew led very unhappy lives. He omitted to specify whether they had had the misfortune to have grown up under the shadow of an earlier law which automatically branded them as criminal outcasts.
Questions about a family tragedy were rightly deflected.

Asked what drove him on, lugrams admitted to being "rather bottlest up" about things. "You're a cautious man", said Clare. apropos the way the editor of Britain's funniest and most abrasive magazine leads his private life. That sounded about right: wary, increasingly wary, lest middle age draw him into the ranks of his own largets.

This year's season began with two such: For Those in Peril running with an all-male cast at the Shaw while the girls opened at the Cochrane with the Bronte drama, Charlotte, Emily and Anne. Neither had exceptional individual performances but both were acted and staged at a consistently high level of com-petence - in fact, they were more polished than NYT productions used to be, despite the fact that Michael Croft himself was rushed to hospital with angina at the start of rehearsals of For Those in Peril and had to hand the production over to a young assistant. But the plays were so duli that the Royal Shakespeare Company itself could not have done much more with them, and one could not honestly recommend them as an evening in the theatre.

Shakespeare, of course, is a special test and a special oppor-tunity to get ordinary theatre-goers' banknotes in the till. Much will depend on Hamlet, which opens on September 19. The company have to give 19 performances of it in two weeks, which seems pretty brutal, but as a chance for director and actors it has few rivals and, if successful, will prove a powerful advocate for the NYT when it renews its assault on the Arts Council this antumn.

Policy switch that slowed growth

The financial markets and the mass of American economists have failed to observe a most important change in money growth: there has been precious littel of it since the first week of

The markets and the economists are still conditioned in their thinking by the huge money growth boom that began in the

Over the ensuing 12 months, money enjoyed its greatest boun since the Second World War. M1 grew at more than 13.5 per cent during the 12 months from August of last year.

That boom perpelled the economy into a strong recovery, culminating in the rise in real gnp at an annual rate of more than 9 per cent in the second quarter of this year. The same boom killed the decline in interest rates and in recent weeks started to push the rates up - as the financial markets became increasingly fearful of the inflation that the money boom was expected to bring.

The same boom, leading to higher US interest rates, was behind the continuing strength of the dollar and in particular the boom in the dollar in the past couple of months. What has not been widely perceived however, is the moun ing evidence of a substantial slowdown in money growth.

M1 has risen a mere $2.4bn. Yet in the two mouths ending June 8. it had risen almost $16.6bn. Behind this very sharp downturn in the M1 rate of growth lies a virtual freeze on the growth of banks' reserves since early June. The total of the "adjusted monetary base" (sea-in the week of June 8. It was $196.2bu in the week of August The total of banks' "adjusted reserves" (the monetary base less currency held by the non-bank public) was $54.1bn in the first week of June. It was sonally adjusted) was $195.2ba

$54.5bn in the week of August In the two months up to June 8, by contrast, the "adjusted monetary base" (banks' reserves plus currency) rose $4bu.

This very sharp reduction in the rate of growth of banks' reserves did not occur by

Three months ago, the Federal Reserve, fearful of inflation, began to restrict the growth of banks' reserves. The determination of the Fed to pursue this restrictive policy has increased, not diminished, over the last three months.

At the July meeting of the

the supreme monetary policy-making body for the Federal Reserve system, narrow majorities in favour of restraint were later converted into virtual unanimity. The majority in favour of restraint, which was June meetings, became 10 to 2.
And one of the two dissenters, Governor Henry Wallich wanted even more restraint than the majority would sanction.

The record of the July meeting, published last Friday, said that such a policy of restraint on the growth of banks' reserves "would provide some insurance against the possible need for a considerably greater degree of restraint later

Summarizing the consequences of this change in policy, Citibank made the following forecast:

growth (of the banks) is expected to remain weak in August as the Fed tries to moderate M1's rise; M1's growth rate is forecast to slow to an annual 6 per cent in August and to be moderate in long-term instruments are fore-cast to move irregularly lower during the rest of the year;

Short-term credit demand in the rest of the quarter is projected to remain weak as the corporate liquidity;

 Lower bond rates, as the quarter progresses, will allow for some funding-out by corporations, but most of the maturity shift can be expected to occur

 Kev economic indicators will signal an easing of the recovery's The Citibank team might have added that the reduction in interest rates would lead to a weakening of the dollar. There is already evidence of alowing recovery.

Retail sales, housing starts, durable goods orders and the level of initial claims for unemployment insurance were all pointing to a sharp reduction in economic growth in the July figures. A continuation of the Fed's present restrictive policy seems probable for some months: the Fed changes only slowly in its basic policy commitmes Hence, slower growth into early 1984, accompanied by declining interest rates and a weaker dollar, seem to be the most likely results of a major policy switch beginning to show its effects.

This is one case, however where the odds are not stacked against traditional technology. against traditional technology. Although the silver-halide based chemistry of films was invented in 1840, it has been continously improved over the last 140 years. New films have become more and more sensitive, needing a factor of five to ten times less light every decade. This is the result of intensely competitive research between the film companies. But conventional photography also has much to offer that electronic technology cannot yet match resolution, quality and very compact cameras.

The most important factor of all is that the photographic industry is a wealthy, non-conservative industry, ready and able to bring out better products.

Almost all of the Japanese television firms have demonstrated protections in the part of the protection of the protection strated prototypes similar to the Mavica. These are hand-held TV cameras with built-in video tape recorders, so-called 'camcorders' At a meeting in Tokyo earlier this year, agreement was reached to standardise the video tapes so that they could be interchangeable between machines from different manufacturers. A second video tape recorder will probably be needed to play the hour-long tape

However Kodak, Fuji and camera giants like Asahi, Nikon and Olympus have always incorporated advanced electronics in technological competition bave lectronic revolution may have come as a surprise to UK industry but the big photographic firms have long been armouring themselves for the battle, Kodak has successfully launched the disc camera, a combination of an improved film, an instant flash and a novel lens packaged in a new format. The camera is so small and neat that it cannot be matched by electronic equipment. The disc prepares the customer

This equipment exists already in one of Kodak's laboratories. Equipment will be also produced, and when the technology becomes cheap enough, to enable disc films to be displayed on a home television.

New equipment coming soon

Recently a series of improved films and equipment have been announced by photographic companies. Polaroid has an instant 35mm slide film, at presently only available in the US. Kodak have released a high speed (1000 ASA) colour film and will be producing better colour films based on the same 'T-grain' technology. Fuji will announce the release of competitive slide and print films next year. Both films use flattened grains of sensitive silver halide to intercept more of the light striking the film. We are familiar enough with Polaroid's SX-70 instant print echnology.

The enthusiastic amateur can easily produce really high quality large colour prints at home using Cibachrome (Cibe) or Ektaflex (Kodak), neither of which require delicate temperature control.

This resolution is unlikely to improve significantly in the future, and even if it did. could not be adequately displayed on a home television. The moving image seen on the TV disguises the appailing quality of the individual picture, which we normally see only during a slow motion replay. At least a decade will pass before mass-production electronic imagery approaches the resolution of 35mm films. At the top end of the photographic market, high quality equipment (like Hasselblad cameras) will be unaffected except where expensive electronic graphics systems will be used professionally. Black and white film will be relegated to the specialised end of market for newspapers of artistic photography. Mono-chrome films and photographic papers will cost more than colour photography. The new film technologies (such as "T-grain") are ideal for black and white film, but the investment to produce such films may not be warranted.

Already Agfa and Ilford have produced black and white films which can be processed with normal colour films, emphasising the peripheral position of black and white.

The result will be that electronic cameras will grab some of the bottom end of the market. However, low resolution movie systems have never been anything more than a minority interest and so camcorders have to generate a new mass market, rather than substitute for an old one. People will still like pictures that they can hold in their hand and so 110 and disc films will remain big business. 35mm film photography will be affected more by fashion than electronic technology, which will make the cameras easier to use and smaller.

Further improvements to films will keep electronic imagery at bay for at least a decade, and probably longer.

Getting the words right

by Richard Sharpe Since the start of the computer experienced programmers have faced the problem of what to do if they don't want to go into

One answer has always been that they should become technical writers, the chroniclers of computer systems who try and explain to other technicians and the nontechnical public how computer systems work,

As more and more computers are used by staff without a computer background the work of technical authors becomes important. At the same time the possibility that a programmer will make a good technical author gets more remote. In the first place even a good technical author will be earning less than a programmer. Today's salary for technical authors ranges between £7,000 and £8,000, depending on the employer and the location.

Secondly some employers believe that programmers get too exited about the techniques used them to a non-technical audience. One big US computer company has even gone to the lengths of defining a vocabulary that techni-cal authors have to choose from and restricting their sentence construction to a few simple

Deviation from the chosen form and vocabulary is forbidden as it is believed it confuses the

No defined vocabulary

When reading manuals provided with computer systems, especially the ones that come with personal computers, the problems of technical authorship immediately become apparent.

Where do you start to tell somebody new to computers how to get the system performing the jobs they want? Do you start with plugging it in and turning it on or would that insult the audience and make the keen user a bored Luddite? No defined vocabulary or preformed sentence construction can make up for a badly organized manual that leaves the ser unsure just when problems begin to arise.

Putting pages of helpful information into the system only transfers the problem from the printed page to the memory of the computer. Yet a lot of the prompts and aids flashed up for a user on a screen are still written by programmers who are excited about how the system works instead of being engaged in the important job of communicating with the ultimate user of the system. Essentially, good computers are knocking the enthusiasm out of many new users because the manual and computer-stored have the patience to wade through obscure, badly organized docu-

From the types of salary quoted as average for technical authors, the profession of technical authorship is not given the status that it deserves. Only when documenting the system is seen as an essential design activity and not just an afterthought will the quality of the manuals, and therefore the status of the staff, mprove.

With more than £250,000 of additional With more than £250,000 of additional finance which it has just received, a small British company is stepping up its plans to become a leading supplier of distributed industrial interocomputer. Systems. Already the company, Beale Electronic Systems Ltd (BES), bas an impressive list of clients for which it has undertaken work in instrumention and envincering suffragre-tation and engineering software. But what sets BES apart from similar industrial consultancies is its development of a high-integrity local network. At a conservative estimate, says 28-year-old managing director Nicholas Beale, the market for systems connected by networks of this type will exceed £250m a year by 1986.

Earlier this year, BES signed a deal with Sciou International, the computer activity of British Petroleum, to collaborate on the development and eventual marketing of the Beale network, which is called HHLAN. This system no doubt also helped the persunde the new investors, who include Thames Valley Vantures owned by the Petitish Ballman. Ventures, owned by the British Railways Pension Funds, and Investors in Industry, sweed by the Bank of England and the Local area neworks (LANs) are one of the most active areas of development in computing. Dozens of companies have hunched proprietary cable systems which can be used to link together such equipment as microcomputers and word processors, so that they can communicate with each other. But most of these LANs - including the widely supported Ethernet from Xerox Corporation - were designed for use in office. Attempting to apply them in industrial

In industry, cables are far more likely to suffer breakages, and the consequent

"downtime" may be more serious than it would be in the office. Even if cables remain intact, electrical noise from industrial machinery can interfere with the data sent

High-integrity systems are designed to evercome problems like these. Beale's HILAN is based on fibre optics. Instead of electrical signals being sent along copper wires, coded pulses of light travel down hair-thin strands of glass. Optical fibre communication is not susceptible to electrical

"One of the most obvious differences compared with most local area networks is that HILAN is inherently self-healing." says Nick Beale. This means that the system keep working, even if there is a break in the cable or a failure at either end.

HillAN also operates at high speed. According to the specification, this is 10 megabits per second (a megabit is one million bits of information), but Beale says that technically the speed limitation goes up to hundreds of megabits a second.

"We can guarantee very fast access times," he adds, "Critical alarm messages can get through in milliseconds, and that's very important if you are thinking about nuclear

Other companies are working on high-integrity networks, and some LAN developers have also adopted fibre optics, but the approach taken by BES has attracted interest from several industrial giants. On a recent trip to the US, Nick Beale found top executives of leading industrial companies hastily rearranging their schedules in order to see him. "One even laid on the company helicopter for me from the airport," he

Apart from its technical attractions. Beale's approach to the marketing of HILAN is also being well received. Unlike some LAN es also being weit received. Uninke some LAN companies, Beale plans to licence HILAN to other manufacturers, so that customers will have a number of sources of supply. He hopes that licences will be taken up by about half-adozen major companies spread through the

Another key element in HILAN's success could be its compatibility with Ethernet, even though it works in a totally different way. An Ethernet user would be able to switch to HILAN with no software changes at all, "We are essentially piggs-backing on the enormous software investment in Ethernet," says Beale, "It's conceivable that we will be able to offer a network which is part Ethernet

Despite the support of Scicon, the enthusiasm among other big companies, and his confidence in the technical merits of HILAN, Nick Beale is being fairly modest in projections for his company's future turnover. He expects it to be approaching £2m in 1985, and in the region of £3 to £4m in 1986. Even so, he sees Beale Electronic Systems as being a major player in this new industrial market.

"I have no doubt there will be competitors," he says, "I have no doubt our network will be technically superior, and I believe our marketing strategy will be

This is because most competitors are likely to be big companies, which will not be so ready to licence other big firms, and therefore their systems a wide spread of ability. The critical success factor, Beale believes, "will be getting substantial take-up of the system by major companies."

A quicker delivery, by electronics

Trials of an experimental system under which people would be able to order documents and have them delivered electronically are recommended in a study commissioned by the Department of Trade and Industry, and undertaken by a team at Scicon Lad. Called Project HERMES, the scheme would use Teletext, the new "super-telex" service which British Telecom plans to introduce in 1984.

In 1984 Teletext (not to be confused with teletext, the Ceefax and Oracle TV Information service) uses terminals with a full impossible character set. with a full typewriter character set, and will transmit at high speeds over International public networks. The HERMES team looked at ways of exploiting this service within the information and publishing community.

It recommends demonstrations in a number of phases, so that potential users can gain experience of costs and benefits. In the first phase, a user group will be able to find out about electronic document delivery by receiving a wide variety of documents from different sources. Subsequent phases would include remote searching, document ordering, and electronic mail

Project HERMES is complementary to the DTI's Teletext Promotion Scheme, announced last March. This provides 50 per cent of the cost of Teletext equipment form selected manufacturers.

Hadlee superb as England make heavy weather of win

By John Woodcock Cricket Correspondent

TRENT BRIDGE: England beat New Zealand by 165 runs.

By the time England won the fourth Cornhill Test match against New Zealand only three hours of the last day were left. It looked, last Friday, as though it would not be hours which England had to spare, but days. Needing 511 to win New Zealand were bowled out for a commendable 345, their last five wickets adding 178 runs yesterday.

Starting at 167 for five they were kept going by Coney, who made 68, and by Hadlee, named afterwards as the Man of the Series, whose 92 not out was splendidly exhilarating. In the four Test matches Hadlee scored 306 runs at an average of 51 and broke the record for New Zealand in England by taking 21 wickets. We shall know what the selectors think about it when, later this week, they announce the captain for the winter tour and early next week they give us the side to go with him to Fiji, New Zealand and Pakistan. I am not sure that the re-appointment of Willis is quite the foregone conclusion it is being seen as.

Although England took a new ball after one over yesterday it brought them only the wicket of Lees, well caught low down in the gully off Cowans. Willis put everything he had into this new ball spell but without getting anyone out, Trueman's record bag of Test wickets for England, therefore, remains intact, at any rate until the new year when England play their next Test match, against New Zealand in Wellington.

Again it was Cook who was most help when England were stuck. THE OVAL: Essex, with seven second-innings wickets in hand, lead a Surrey by 54 runs.

Essex got their maximum number of bonus points yesterday but before the close Gooch, Gladwin and Hardie fell to Thomas and Payne for 46 runs, which leaves McEwan, Fletcher and the rest with much to do today. Richards, who now and again produced a memorable drive through the off-side field, had been one to slow Essex's advance, and after him Thomas was batting with such freedom and confidence that it leaded for a moment as if Fesser. looked for a moment as if Essex do today.

top-coats as Pauline, 57 not ont, and Stewart, 15, walked out to take guard with Surrey at 92 for one, 208 runs behind. There were runs to be made on this pitch and Surrey had at least a couple of good reasons why a sizable score would be eminently satisfying. Righting the wrong done them at Chelmsford at the end of May probably headed Surrey's list.

Then, you will remember, Phillip and Foster shared all 10 wickers as Surrey were skittled for 14 runs. So it was understandable that Surrey's batsmen placed a special emphasis on making runs in this match and, as it happened, the first eight in the order all did well. It was an unusually even day, the last passage excepted, when Surrey scored their runs at an agreeable rate

AMERICA'S CUP Victory away to slow start

From Barry Pickthall Newport, Rhode Island

Victory '83, Britain's challenger for the America Cup, looked to be heading for her worst defeat at the hands of Australia II in the first of their seven race final elemination

The light muggy conditions, which had forced the cancellation of all racing on Sunday, looked like distrupting these final trials to select the challenger again but an 11-knot breeze finally filled in at noon allowing the vachts to get away to a clean start 40 minutes

Victory, with Lauric Smith 21 the helm, was held to a defending role throughout the pre start manoeuvres, but managed to bear away and break clear moments before the gun fired to cross the line in a safe leeward position two second later and level with the Australian 12-metre.

However, it quickly became apparent, that Australia II, the yacht with the radical winged keel the Americans fear could be the first challenger to win the America's Cup was sailing faster and pointing higher than her British opponent and rounded the first weather mark a devastating

For a fine St Lubbock's Day (we ust continue to rememb father of the August Bank Holiday, even though his date had been changed) it was a pity that there were so few spectators at Bristol hardly more than a thousand. ATHLETICS: CHASE FOR NEW WORLD TIMES COMES UNSTUCK

Superb win, but Cram misses Ovett record

Puffing fillies: Kathy Cook has plenty of breath left to win,100 metres.

The race for world records came unstuck yesterday in the Nike Classic at Crystal Palace, but Steve Cram had another superiative solo win, this time in the two miles. And Steve Oven lost an allcomers' record to Eamonn Coghlan, following the previous day's loss of his 1500 metres world record to Sydney Marce.

In his race ten years ago, Foster was on his own after a lap-and-ahalf, and Cram was in the same position throughout the second mile yesterday. Eamonn Martin had boped to stay with the pace to help when Turnbull dropped out. but he was still in the pack almost 80 metres behind Cram at that

Crain maintained the pace until the sixth lap, but the seventh one in almost 64 seconds left him needing a 58.12 seconds last lap to break Ovett's best time, and he just failed by 1.42 seconds in clocking 8 minutes 14.93 seconds.

In deference to Cram, Ovett's world best from five years ago was set with Henry Rono on his heels, and Foster's 8:13.8 was set when there: was 'not' the exhaustive European circuit on which, last metres time, and just failed to break Oven's then world 1500

He will probably now regret joking earlier that he at least wanted to beat the new women's world record of Jarmila Kratochvilova. He failed by three tenths of a second. And in the 3,000 metres.

THE announcer prefaced Cog-hlan's race with "we're hoping to get the field confirmed before we get under way". Even allowing for Coghlan, the favourite's habit of crossing himself before and after a race this was going a bit too far. Coghlan went just far enough to win after Graham Williamson tried to outsprint him in the finishing straight, but the Irish-man certainly did not go fast enough to get anywhere near John Walker's world record of 4 minutes 51.4 seconds, as he had

Two Czechs hold the balance on bouncing courts

The most probable winners, though it would be unwise to risk much money on either, are Martin Navratilova and Ivan Lendl, who were both born in Czechoslovicia

The seedings, based on rankand Hana Mandlikova v Chris Lloyd. The corresponding men's pairings should be John McEnroe v Jose Higueras (the obvious beneficiary from Curren's absence), Jimmy Connors v Guiller-mo Vilas, Jose-Luis Clerc v Yannick Noah and Mais Wilander v Lendl.

Miss Navratilova has been almost invincible in the past two years. The enemy within is the one she has to fear most. On the biggest occasions she is prone to lose just enough composure to be vulnerable. This has been most evident in the US championships in which (like Bjorn Borg) she has competed 10 times without winning the title. Miss Navratilova has only once reached the final. The first player to beat her in this tournament, back in 1973, was Veronica Burton, of Britain. Miss Lloyd, six times champion, has won more money from these championships (roughly £212,640) than anyone else and more matches (66) than any other woman. She is still good enough to win, if Miss Navraulova gives her the chance, Mrs Lloyd's first opponent will be Shelley Walpole. of Britain. Of the eight lower seeds, three Europeans - Andrea Temesvari, Joanna Durie and their supposed betters.

Miss Durie won £14,670 by beating Mis Mandlikova in Sunday's final of a warm-up tournament in New Jersey and, with Sharon Walsh, won the doubles as well. Miss Durie is in the same section of the draw as Miss Austin, whom she beat in the French championships. In addition to Miss Walpole and Miss Durie, Britain will be represented by Virginia Wade, Anne Hobbs and Annabel Croft.

Lendl has vet to win a grandings devized by the players slam singles championship but associations, suggest that the last last year beat McEnroe here and eight women should be Miss Navratilova v Sylvia Hanika, Andrea Jaeger v Panela Shriver, court suits Lendi's game and he recently won the Canadian title on a sumilar surface, beauing and Hana Mandhisova. Ches. on a sumilar surface, beauing Coanors on the way. McEnroe, three times champion, has not played particularly well since Wimbledon and Conpors, four times champion, will have his thirty first birthday on Friday. Either could win, but Lendi's chance is obvious.

Nine days ago Wilander made a big advance as a hard-court player winning at Cincinnati, where beat Lendl and McEnroe, But at the age of 19 Wilander remains an outsider - as does his successor as champion of France, Noah, who may lack the confidence and inspiration he had in Paris. Of the rest, Vilas, Johan Kriek and Vitas Gerulaitis are capable of playing well on this surface and, moreover, need good per-formances to reestablish themselves as contenders for big titles. None of these three is likely to wan the championship, but all have it in then to upset more fancied competitors. The only British participant is John Lloyd.

This is the third of the year's grand-slam championships. Mrs Lloyd and Noah won the singles in Paris and Miss Navratiova and McEnroe won at Wimbledon. At this inimitably distinguished level no player of either sex is exercising supremacy though

The Czech connexion: Lendi's backhand to the fore

Miss Navratilova has the class to do so. At a lower level it is interesting to note that the Soviet Union will be represented here for the first time since 1976.

The singles champions will each receive a cheque for the equivalent of £80,000. The total prize money is £1,204,000, of which £1,100,000 goes to the five main events, £64,000 to competitors in the qualifying competition and £40,000 to what are known here as "senior" events.

Off court there will be a lot of noise and huge demands on American stocks of hot dogs, hamburgers, roast beef, croissants, brie, squerkraut, ice cream, Cora-Cola, beer and coffee - and enough ice to sink a ship. The fact that Greville Starkey is now facing a minimum sentence of 12 days' suspension for his reckless riding of Ruff House at Goodwood last Friday is a source of worry to those closely involved in the business. As with driving offences a totting up system is operated during the current scason. The Goodwood stewards therefore had no option but to send Starkey forward to the disciplinary committee of the Jockey Club for sentence in view of his six-day ban for careless siding at Sahshury on May 8.

The trainers as well as the

The trainers as well as the jockeys think that the present sentences are too severe. Dick Hern, Michael Stoute, Gry Harwood and Fulke Johnson Houghton have all expressed their concern. Harwood comments:

They seem to be hoist with their own petard. It is not easy for the authorities, however, Safety con-siderations must be paramount. But when safety is not concerned there ought to be more room for Joe Mercer and Edward Hide are two of the most respected jockeys in the game. Mercer has nine classic victories to his credit and has ridden more winners than any man except Lester Piggott. Hide has had five classic successes and is in third position to this pair as regards numbers of winners ridden. "The topping up system is wrong", Mercer says. "Each case should be treated on its individual merits." Hide is of

Pat. Eddery's enterprising vic-tory on Tolomeo in the Budweiser Million on Sunday hammered home once again the lesson that we possess the best jockeys in the world. Their initiative, tactical sense and courage are a byword, "We don't want our individuality killing off", Mercer says.

Both the United States and France, the other two leading racing powers, operate similar systems to ours and impose severe penalties. However, the gap between the racing in those counties and in England is wide. In the States for example races are run more or less fiat out from start to finish. Horses are taught to come out of the stalls running at full gallop. Sunday's spectacu-lar in Chicago was not a typical example of their methods.

This of course means that the fields become spread out at an earlier stage and that the jockeys are therefore less likely to encounter traffic problems. There are also fewer runners per race. In England, horses are taught to relax and reserve their energies for a final effort. This also applies in France, but the fields tend to be

Edward Hide: "Jockeys are faced with an eternal dilemma of whether to go for the gap and risk a possible supension or just to sit tamely and make no effort to win".

The individual nature of the Goodwood, Epsom and Brighton are full of undulations and turns, with steep hills. By the very nature of the camber, they are difficult courses around which to manoeuvre over half a ton of horse flesh galloping at speeds of over 30 mph. In the States and France, on the other hand, the courses are flat and more even, as he had been in his previous Goodwood victory. Unfortun-ately on this occasion there was no room for Starkey to deliver his challenge at the crucial stage. So he took a deliberate chance and forced his way through, causing interference to Passing Stone. Starkey was wrong and deserved to lose the race. But the question must be asked whether a they will be wise to ask themselves these questions: suspension is fair. Starkey had a should the totting up system be duty both to himself and to reviewed and should a more Harwood and the owners to do all

Hide put the situation in a sursbell. This is our eternal dilemma. We are continually courses in Britain cannot be faced with the decision of whether stressed too highly. Tracks like to go for the gap and risk a to go for the gap and risk a possible suspension or just to sit tamely and make no effort to Hide's statement does not dramatise the problem. And as Mercer points out the matter is becoming more urgent. "We are moving into the autumn and a period of soft ground. Maiden races will be divided and in many Now let us look at the affair of Starkey and Bluff House. This is a two-year-old which needs cover-fields and the varying nature of our courses is one wholers. One examined by the Jockey Club when they come to consider a

London's Ebony Steel Band, who chose 'Roman Times' as their carnival theme, go on the march after elaborate preparations

Notting Hill was not a place for the delicate of hearing or constitution yesterday as blue skies and warm sunshine attracted huge crowds to the annual west London carnival (David Nicholson-Lord writes).

Organizers estimated the attendance at well over last year's 250,000 and said it was the biggest in the carnival's 18-year history. On Sunday, up to 100,000 are estimated to have turned out, twice last year's figure.

On the ground it was the same throbbing, lurching, occasionally numbing mixture as in previous years. Outdoor sound systems at almost every corner competed with the steel bands. The fragrance of goat curry and damplings mingled with fried fish and hot Trinidad

Through it all, down Ladbroke Grove and ramifying haphazardly into scores of side streets, wound the main procession - about 30 floats proceeding at the pace of a shell-shocked tortoise. Each had its technicolor chorus of dancers.

The manes of the bands captured the slightly schizoid quality of the event: Butterfly Magic; Hurricane Force; Hypergalactic Space Station; Bourbon Warrior and Sus.

The police, who were reportedly under instructions to smile at all costs, maintained a low profile despite a rash of pickpocketing on Sunday and 20 arrests compared with eight arrests last year.

Commander John Perrett, head of B district, blamed the increase partly on increased attendances. but said it was small in comparison with the numbers of people. The police strength was substantially lower than previous years.

BBC's correspondent in South Asia, Mr Mark Tully. Mr Tully, aged 47, who is based in Delhi, and is the longest-serving and most distinguished expatriate correspondent in the sub-continuous and the sub-conti nent, is particularly well-known there because of the wide listening audience for the BBC World

He had been present Naudera in the northern part of Sind province on Sunday when a ation of the magistrate and, presumably in retaliation, a press statement was issued on Sunday evening which accused him of fomenting a riot in the town.

The statement, which was put out through Associated Press of Pakistan, said that he had gone round asking people why they were not joining the demon-strators and when local officials asked him to stop it led to an

Mr Tully firmly denied that any such thing had happened, and spent much of the day trying to persuade the Government to withdraw the report. But the rumours spread at the scene of the not present, Elsewhere in Pakistan the civil

Mr Ghulam Mustafa Jatoi. aged 24, the son of the jailed leader of the Sind Pakistan regime did not act swiftly to accede to the MRD's demands. He said at a meeting called in

"When you destroy the leadership of the movement the there is bloodshed the Government will be responsible for it.

"Seventy-five per cent of the MNA and MPA (Members of the National and Provincial Assemblies) have been arrested. When the other 25 per cent are gone the new leadership will be from the masses and we do not know what will be its face. It could be Russian-backed. It could be Communist."

President Zia however plainly felt confident enough that things had calmed down sufficiently for him to leave the country for a sixday visit to Turkey, where a military regime is also struggling with the problems of a controlled return to democracy. Begin's announcement of his intention to resign as Prime Minister of Israel have once again brought the unstable situation in the Middle East into sharp focus in Washington (Nicholas Ashford

Coming on the eve of the first nniversary of President Reagan's Middle East peace initiative, the two events have served as stark reminders of how little progress has been achieved during the past

Although Mr Reagan said in a radio broadcast at the weekend that his initiative was still alive, US policymakers are distinctly gloomy about the chances bringing peace and stability to the region in the forsceable future.

It had long been expected there would be casualties among the multinational force sooner or later, given the nature of the tension in Lebanon where rival fanctions have been killing each other for years. However, the deaths of the two Marines has underscored the lack of progress that has been made since the peacekeeping forces were first deployed in Lebanon lane was said to have made some progress during his latest rounds of troop withdrawal talks, tens of thousands of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian forces remain firmly entrenched on Lebanese soil.

Mr Reagan yesterday expressed "profound sorrow" on hearing about the Marines' casualties. The President, who is on holiday in California, described the deaths as tragic and praised the courage of the Marines in their role as

US sources said it appeared that the Marines were caught in the crossfire and there was no sign of a deliberate campaign against the American or other units in the multi-national force, the US does not intend to alter its present commitment to the peacekeeping

The same sources said they did not expect any major changes to if Mr Begin goes ahead with his intention to resign.

Although his departure will remove a man whose stubborness often made him difficult to deal with, his successor is expected to follow very similar policies towards Lebanon, the West Bank and the Arab world.

The papers

Party newspaper Neses Deut-schland has come out in strong support of President Andropov's offer to scrap some SS-20 medium-range nuclear missiles as part of an East-West arms accord. It said: "Here in the GDR this readiness to take a further great step to bring the take a further great step to bring the disarmament question forward is greeted with joy and agreement." It said the offer dismissed Western said the offer dismissed Western charges that the Soviet Union would simply shift the SS-20s to the eastern part of the Soviet Union. The paper added: "The West has tried to disguise its rigid position against any agreement in the negotiations with the slanderous demand that the Soviet Union must move. The new Soviet step and all past initiatives of the Soviet Union, as well as the GDR and other brother countries, show who is brother countries, show who is really moving for peace."

The Daily Star says that the killing of two American marines in the Lebanon is a tragically topical the Lebanon is a tragically topical escalation of a war which has divided Israel and which, as much as anything, has forced the imminent departure of the iron-willed zealot (Mr Begin) who has dominated Middle Eastern politics since 1977. "Begin has much to his credit" the mare has much to his credit", the paper says. "The former terrorist won a Nobel Peace Prize for his peace deal with Egypt's Anwar Sadat. He has secured israel's frontiers as never before-but the cost is still to be paid. For his population of the West Bank of the Jordan-the horneland of the Palestinians-ensures that Israel will not sleep easy in their beds for many years to come."
